

Reply to an Atheist:

Anyone who has nothing to look forward to in life than annihilation at the end of his brief 70 +/- years, to me, is a sad soul.

Look at it this way; let's give 50-50 that you are right: at the end of my life I die and am no more, the same as you—I am no worse off; but during my life I had the blessed hope of eternal life and the personal relationship with my God to gladden my heart and make life worthwhile.

Now 50-50 that I am right. Again we both live our life and die. I receive my Eternal life and get to live with my wonderful Saviour, Whom I love and communicate with daily, forever! You have to face the judgment—and finally annihilation. First knowing you lost what had been placed within you reach to have had—Now who is the sorry one?

Christians don't live in fear; they live with hope, joy and peace of heart! It has nothing to do with witches, of which we have more now than ever before in the history of mankind. It has to do with our God and our Saviour and the wonderful freedom we have in knowing and serving Him.